

The pitfalls of stratified education systems – such as Switzerland’s – in terms of inequality have long been known. Yet, fundamental systemic change towards more inclusive systems seems a very remote prospect. Promoting scientifically evaluated adaptations of innovative policies and practices employed elsewhere may give impetus to reconsider the workings of the Swiss education system.

UNIVERSITY OF BERN

Switzerland

PIONEER^{ED}

Funded by the European Union